Lee Earle "James" Ellroy (born March 4, 1948) is an American crime fiction writer and essayist. Ellroy has become known for a telegrammatic prose style in his most recent work, wherein he frequently omits connecting words and uses only short, staccato sentences, and in particular for the novels The Black Dahlia (1987), The Big Nowhere (1988), L.A. Confidential (1990), White Jazz (1992 ...

One of the reasons I love James Ellroy is his unflinching, honest portrayal of what all humans are: flawed, to different degrees. CLANDESTINE, to me, is what begins the L.A. saga, and it is the only way to be introduced to one of Ellroy's best characters: The monster that is Dudley Smith. Many, it seems, felt the ending wrapped up too neatly or improbably, but it worked for me entirely.

Love James Ellroy, and his writing style. It's light, easy to read, yet the stories are complex and filled with detail. Character development is good and the plot is rich in personal convictions and morals. Trying to always be a good guy can be tough. Ellroy fills our protagonist's life with trials, tribulations, good vs evil, and good guys and rogue cops. Very interesting tale.
