Amazon.co.uk: Search Engines: Kindle Store

Often, the primary component of the search query is based upon the book's title and subtitle. When a user searches Amazon for something specific, like your book, they will search by the title of the book, and Amazon in turn shows results for that title. That is the simplest interaction. For both fiction and nonfiction books, however, customers often don't know the title of the book, but instead search for genres or subjects and then Amazon attempts to match the query with products that ...
