Set in Ireland in 1959, Cummins' first novel (she's also the author of the memoir A Rip in Heaven, 2004) is a deeply moving and elegiac look at a vanishing culture. Told in Christy's vernacular but often poetic first-person voice, The Outside Boy is gorgeously written and an implicit celebration of Irish storytelling.

Christy, the outside boy, takes a new road, trying to unravel his personal history. We follow him on the road, into school, church, stores, the houses of the "placed" folks, rich and poor. He's looking for HIS place. This is a very good book, real and moving, and thought-provoking. The ending is fairy tale absolut, and secretly I loved it.
